Ruby Bridges was born in 1948 and grew up in New Orleans. She was one of the first African American children to attend a white school in 1960. In her 5th grade, schools were segregated, and she was enrolled in the first grade. This was a big step forward in desegregation, and she was a symbol of change. In 1964, President Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act, which was a major victory for the civil rights movement.
